“Often when you think you’re at the end of something, you’re at the beginning of something else.” - Fred Rogers
The Great Turn-Out: Factory Girls and Maine’s First Labor Strike
a talk by University of New England history professor Dr. Elizabeth DeWolfe
Thursday, March 26
6:30-8:00 pm
(Thursday, April 2, snow date)

In 1841, nearly 500 female factory workers walked out of Saco’s York Manufacturing Company and paraded up Main Street, chanting and singing. They gathered in a local church, formed a committee, and sent the factory owner a document articulating their complaints about wages, housing, and paternalistic rules. This illustrated talk will examine the tense days that followed and show how a strike in one Maine town connected to national agitation for women’s rights, including suffrage.
